Museum of Love is the musical project of Pat Mahoney (Founding member of LCD Soundsystem) and Dennis McNany (Jee Day).

Longtime friends in New York, McNany and Mahoney found a similar sensibility and a shared vocabulary for interpreting surroundings, something that began with their remix of Battles' "My Machines feat. Gary Numan" and extended into their creation of a full length record together.

Naming their duo in ode to Daniel Johnston's song of the same named, Mahoney divulges, "I had always loved the song, and had been thinking of what such an edifice would contain when we were trying to name the project." McNany continues, "Pat's a sculptor, I'm a painter, we make music and museums are sacred spaces and love is an elusive thing."

McNany did most of the songwriting as well as production and instrumentation, while Mahoney is on vocals and of course, drums, but Museum of Love was an entirely collaborative process as the two edited and arranged tracks in the studio. Mahoney says the process of collaboration was energizing, while McNany simply explains, "making the record was pure pleasure. Waiting for it to come out has been the hardest thing."

"Museum of Love moves at a stately pace here, offering a slow and steady chugger that wraps itself in gauzy vocal layers and takes its sweet time reaching its climactic peak." Pitchfork
