“...a haunting testament to Cunningham and Stewart’s adventurousness and willingness to merge competing ideas within each track [...] the duo can translate this energy into ballads, blending their harmonies serenely into a beautiful abyss.” - Consequence of Sound

“a little bit rock and a little bit folk, but certainly set for great things with their individual sound.” - Vogue Paris

“Heavy guitar-work with fluttering harmonies and off-tempo vocal arrangements... It’s no secret locally that these two on their own possess more talent than average.” - Uproxx

Ohmme (pronounced “ohm”) is the self-titled debut by Chicagoans Sima Cunningham and Macie Stewart. The two have become integral parts of the Chicago music scene, having performed with a diverse range of musicians and musical styles. Between them, Cunningham and Stewart have helped found the bands Kids These Days and Marrow as well as toured with artists Tweedy and Chance the Rapper and recorded with Richard Thompson.

Originally released digitally in 2016 as a 6-song EP under the band’s original name Homme (before discovering a South Korean pop duo with the same name), this vinyl release includes two additional unreleased tracks. While diversity plays a large role, Ohmme’s musical sensibility falls inline with acts like St. Vincent, Tune-Yards, or even Tortoise for its ambitious approach to sonic experimentation. The band have garnered early praise from multiple sources, earning them a spot at the coveted Pitchfork Music Festival in 2016. The Chicago Tribune noted the EP “spanned a huge dynamic range, from vaporous to violent.”

With plans to spend most of 2017 on tour, the band have already performed as support for The Joy Formidable, Tortoise, and Half Waif. Full-length album to be released in 2018.
